SERVING COUNTRY - CENTENARY & BEYOND

In association with this year's NAIDOC Week theme 'Serving Country - Centenary & Beyond' a number of local Indigenous service people are remembered.

20 JUNE - 16 AUGUST 2014

We thank the local community for their images included in this exhibition celebrating Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander culture in the Region.

If anyone from the community would like to share their family history through photographs or records with the Gallery & Museum, we are always interested in adding to the historical archives.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander readers should be aware that this document contains images and names of people who have passed away.

Civil Construction Corps Gladstone

Hector Johnson (Gooreng Gooreng) *

Norman Buller (Gooreng Gooreng) *

George Stanley Pickwick Snr (Gooreng Gooreng) *

In March 1942 the War Cabinet accepted a recommendation for the creation of a Civil Constructional Corps (CCC), which would undertake war-related construction projects within Australia. The Corps was formed as a civilian rather than military organisation and comprised volunteers and persons called up under military impressment. Most were over 35 years of age. The major occupational categories were labourers, carpenters and truck drivers. Members of the Corps were sent to all parts of Australia to work on projects such as docks, aerodromes, roads, gun emplacements, hospitals, fuel storage depots, pipelines and factories.

The Australian Women's Land Army (AWLA) was established on 27 July 1942 as a national organisation under the authority of the Director General of Manpower. During the Second World War, the AWLA was formed to overcome increasing labour shortages in the farming sector. Members were generally unskilled female workers aged between 18 and 50 years and were of British origin or immigrants from allied countries. Members were often sent all over Australia working in a variety of agricultural labours such as vegetable and fruit growing, poultry raising, sheep and wool work.
